PR - When A Question Is Not A Question

Based in London, Libby Phippard is a talented singer-songwriter who's spent the last twelve months garnering a reputation as a true musical talent. Entitled 'When A Question Is Not A Question', her latest single is a lyrically poetic, upbeat electronic piece that showcases not only her songwriting prowess, but her individuality as an artist. It's reminiscent of Ed Sheeran's 'You Need Me, I Don't Need You', with rhythmic lyrics and rap-inspired vocals.

Lyricaly, she explores and self-reflects on past toxic relationships, a reminder to keep them at bay, and cut out from our lives. The track's diction-heavy vocals and emotion-packed lyrics combine to create a superb single that puts Libby's decade of songwriting experience up on display.

Produced by Danny Blackburn, this is Phippard's fourth single and first venture into dabbling with electronic music. The track premieres 27th August 2021, and will be available to stream across all major platforms. "This song expresses a lot of anger at a level of passive aggression that I think most people have experienced at one point in their lives – that attempt at control while maintaining some semblance of the moral high ground, where we're put in a position where we can't 'reasonably' say no, regardless of how much we want to. It's about distancing ourselves from those situations, about saying no anyway, completely unapologetically."
